

Abstract

[169] A system having a device for dispensing metered portions of various substances, for example for making up a hair-dye mixture. The device includes a magazine which is provided with a plurality of receiving stations which are each designed to receive an exchangeable storage container which has a storage chamber which is filled with a substance. The system also comprises one or more storage containers and collection containers for collecting dispensed substances. The system also includes, by way of example, one or more pumps which are designed, when actuated, to pump substance out of the storage chamber of a storage container and to dispense it into the collection container.